

The "Minimanual of the Urban Guerrilla," written by the Brazilian guerrilla leader (deceased by bullet) Carlos Marighella appeared in the January-February 1970 issue of the Havana TRICONTINENTAL and the article was translated and published on 20 April 1970 in JPRS Report #50349. Because of the intense interest within the intelligence community an extra 200 copies of this manual were run off (most of these are now gone). This manual appears to be the "Bible" of the guerrillas today, in contrast to the doctrines of the ill-fated "Che" who advocated revolution in the countryside and then the city and who fell a victim to his own stupidities. (This "Minimanual" has caused a great uproar in some--including government-- circles as to whether instructions on how to blow up a government should be provided by a U.S. Government agency, ad inf.)
